

💡 Save Endangered Animals With Cuteness 💡

By Audrey Shen

I adore cute animals, especially pandas. I learned that pandas are endangered from watching documentaries and reading books. It is important to protect endangered animals, but I especially want to protect pandas because of their cuteness. This gave me an idea that if we make all endangered animals really cute, people might be more motivated to protect them.

One night, I had a dream that a fairy transformed endangered animals such as Arctic wolves, penguins, dolphins, and Bengal tigers into cute plush toys for kids. But fairies are not real. My mom told me that in reality business people can make it happen. I want to design irresistibly cute plush toys of endangered animals, ask business people to make them, and deliver them to people around the world. I also want to write an educational booklet for each plush toy to help people understand how to protect that specific endangered animal. My mom suggested creating a QRcode on each plush toy's tag for the same purpose. I like this suggestion. I think it will be beneficial to ask more people for ideas on saving endangered animals with cuteness.

If you hold a soft, fluffy, and incredibly adorable panda plush toy in your arms, don't you want to protect this animal from all the harm in the world? If so, please join me in my effort to save endangered animals with Cuteness!!!!
