

Who knew one year could change so much?
Forced to hide behind a mask
Everyone became half a face, Showing the world just two eyes and a mask

We coughed and received a glare Go back where you came from and take your disease with you.
But our home is just down the street,
and we have no disease.
Between you and me
this virus does not discriminate.
But because we were all hidden Behind our masks
They judged what they couldn't see

Maybe we won't make a color-blind utopia But at least we can make this year go down in history for something good We all want to heal from this pandemic but it's not just our bodies but our communities that need healing There's so much more behind this mask than just a pair of Asian eyes

We are all America
Getting through this together

They want us to go back where we came from Do they know what we want?
We want to be able to go outside,
walk down the street,
get our groceries,
breathe fresh air
with no fear of being who we are behind this mask.
